Journal of Asian Studies

Call for Papers

Editorial invitation | Volume 1, Issue 1 | Updated 6 November 2026

We invite research that examines Asian societies in their historical, political and cultural contexts. Submissions may focus on a clearly defined locality or develop a comparative argument, while explaining how evidence and scale shape the conclusions.

Researchers, lecturers, postgraduate students and emerging scholars from universities and research institutions worldwide are welcome to submit. We seek original contributions that engage with the journal’s scope and relevant scholarship.

Areas of interest

- Political, economic and social developments across Asia
- Regional cooperation, mobility, migration and relations among Asian societies
- History, culture, heritage and comparative research, including Afghanistan and China

Preparing your manuscript

Manuscripts must be written in English, follow the author guidelines and use APA 7 for both in-text citations and the reference list. Other referencing systems are not accepted. The work must be unpublished and must not be under consideration elsewhere. Authors should report methods and evidence accurately and provide relevant ethics, consent, funding and conflict-of-interest information.

Review and first-issue publication

Research submissions undergo editorial screening and independent peer review. Acceptance depends on scholarly quality and suitability; submission does not guarantee publication. Accepted research papers for the first issue will be published without a publication fee.

How to submit

Send a separate title page with author details and affiliations, an anonymised manuscript, an abstract, keywords and references to submission@aa-journal.com. Include the journal name and a short manuscript title in the email subject. Read the author guidelines before submitting.
